

Heart, Lungs, and Body

In Science, students examined how blood flows through parts of the heart, lungs, and body with a STEM activity. Students used water bottles, straws, playdough, and tape to represent the ventricles, atrium, lungs, valves, and red colored water for blood. When the water bottles were squeezed, the “blood” circulated to other areas through the valves.

